HONGRONG, MAY 31st, 1876.

Hongkong jurors have much to grumble at. Take, for instance, the jury summoned for the Criminal Sessions now proceeding, or rather adjourning. Summoned for the 18th Volunteer and Government. Fire Brigades to-May, their duties are extended until the 3rd day at 4 p.m. June, and may possibly then be still further protracted. During this period of nearly three weeks thirty gentlemen are detained in the Colony and could not leave it without special permission in that case asked and obtained. The Sessions drag their slow length along, and in their progress resemble the burning of a halfpenny dip, now flaring up into a flame and anon-sinking-iuto-a-state of-quiesconce. Atintervals of a few days the whole of the thirty jurors have to turn up at the Court and there spend perhaps half-an-hour of the most valuable part of the day, until they ascertain their fate. Seven of their number are then put in the box and detained for an indefinite time while the more fortunate twenty-three remaining can
